

Singapore Legal Futures Competition – Rules

Background

On Wednesday, 8 July 2015, more than 300 lawyers, academics and law students gathered in the Supreme Court Auditorium to hear from legal futurists and experts, such as the eminent author Professor Richard Susskind.

These international legal futurists discussed several key trends which will impact the future of law and the profession, such as the relentless advancement of technology, rise of interactive platforms, increasing globalisation, and a more diverse and vocal citizenry. These trends will shift some types of work out of the hands of lawyers and traditional ideas of what lawyers do and what law firms, or even courts, should look like, will change.

What are your views, thoughts and ideas on what the future holds for Singapore's legal profession, its laws and its legal system? Do you have a vision of what our lawyers, firms or institutions should be like in 20 years' time? Where will we be? Where should we be? And how do we get there?

Participants are encouraged to think "out of the box", and to be creative. Present your ideas by video, in any form – a straight presentation, a video montage, a performance — whatever method you feel best portrays your message.

We hope to receive entries which challenge current assumptions and are surprising, yet not improbable. Entries which include interesting policy proposals will also be well received.
